On-time handover despite obstacles.

During the construction phase the site team had to master an array of unexpected challenges: for example, there was a major fire in April 2009 that completely destroyed the container of the site management and supervisors, along with numerous documents and files. Furthermore, contaminated material from a brickyard came to light during the construction works; this originated from the production site of the Altes Landgut in the first half of the 19th century. This discovery meant that PORR Umwelttechnik had to remove around 90,000 additional m³ of earth and use vibro-displacement compaction for the foundations. Despite these obstacles, the team managed to meet the agreed deadline for the handover.
